There are three main domains of learning and all teachers should know about them and use them to construct lessons. These domains are cognitive (thinking), affective (emotion/feeling), and psychomotor (physical/kinesthetic). Each domain on this page has a taxonomy associated with it. Taxonomy is simply a word for a classification.

Boerne ISD recognizes the importance of providing education and support in social and emotional issues to educate the whole child. We offer a social-emotional curriculum and prevention education in bullying, substance use, violence, and social, emotional, and personal issues. We also provide support for students affected by these issues.

Affective describes something that has been influenced by emotions, is a result of emotions, or expresses emotion. Effective describes something that produces a desired result. Effective comes from the noun effect, which means result. Affective comes from the noun affect, which does not mean the same thing as the verb affect. Affective Definition

Digital education opens up novel avenues for students and teachers to learn and interact together. The evolution of digital tools for learning and the constant transformation of educational technology inspire research that seeks to understand how students' adaptive motivations and emotions for learning might be supported and how learning environments can be personalized.
