At this juncture, conceptual graphs provide a syntactic structure for a smooth mapping to and from natural language, while fuzzy logic provides a semantic processor for approximate reasoning with words having vague meanings.

Like fuzzy attribute values, fuzzy types also form a lattice laying a common ground for lattice-based computation of fuzzy granules. Second, for automated reasoning with fuzzy conceptual graphs, we develop foundations of order-sorted fuzzy set logic programming, extending the theory of annotated logic programs of Kifer and Subrahmanian (1992).

This paper introduces a product-related dependency index that can be used during the conceptual design of mechatronic systems. The index uses fuzzy assessment of adverse effects dependencies combined with quantitative graph theory to compute the level of detrimental interactions present in a system.
