The Beeching cuts (also Beeching Axe) were a reduction of route network and restructuring of the railways in Great Britain, according to a plan outlined in two reports, The Reshaping of British Railways (1963) and The Development of the Major Railway Trunk Routes (1965), written by Dr Richard Beeching and published by the British Railways Board.. The first report identified 2,363 stations and ...

Barbara Castle introduced the concept of the "social railway" that led to many lives being saved. The Labour government of the time carried through what seemed inevitable at the time - the running down of a old-fashioned and declining railway system that was losing passengers and freight traffic, and investing in the expansion of the bright new shiny motor industry and motorways.

British Railways (BR), which from 1965 traded as British Rail, was the state-owned company that operated most of the overground rail transport in Great Britain between 1948 and 1997. It was formed from the nationalisation of the "Big Four" British railway companies and lasted until the gradual privatisation of British Rail, in stages between 1994 and 1997.

There is evidence that women played a part in the early construction of the railways. Helena Wojtczak in her book 'Railway Women' shows that in the 1851 census there were 3 women listed as 'railway labourers', and in the 1850s Elizabeth Holman worked for the Great Western Railway as a navvy by pretending to be a man.
